

DEATHSONG OVERVIEW...

Thousands of years before the creation of Mesopotamia and the Sumerian civilizations, a Mystic by the name of Avin Sa fathered a son out of wedlock. His wife who was also a Mystic died at childbirth leaving him to care for his newborn alone. Avin was no saint, as he was one of the most feared and evil Mystics to have ever existed. The woman for who had his child was not aware of his reputation because he truly did love her. Nevertheless, there was evil in his heart and when his son was born he had blamed him for her death. Every time he looked at his son all he could feel was hatred for taking the life of the woman he loved.

Avin was wealthy and intimidating to say the least and because of that he took whatever woman he wanted. While, all Mystics were powerful in one way or another (wielding their magic) he was not the most powerful. Regardless, even those that were surely more powerful than he would not approach him.

Intimidation was a strong ally to Avin and more powerful than he or not, the ruthlessness that he showed towards those who would dare challenge was enough to make all keep their distance.

Avin had met a woman named Jazel in his travels (leaving his newborn alone with a nanny to watch over him). Avin became enamored with Jazel for the simple fact that she was not intimidated by him, nor was she attracted to his money or fearsome stature. Also, Jazel was one of the most powerful Mystics of all time and this was known to all. He had heard stories of a powerful woman Mystic but he never believed that they would meet.

Avin knew that the only way that he would be able to win Jazel's heart and her love was to change his ways. He had left to return home to son (not because he cared for the boy because he did not in any way). He stayed and raised his son until the age of 10 but it was not an easy or loving childhood. However, there was another reason for his 10 year absence for the rest of the world and that was to create a façade that would fool anyone that he had changed. Out of sight and out of mind. He had also changed his appearance a bit and changed his name (although we do not know what that name was.)

He had done all of this and returned to the town where he met Jazel and presented himself as someone new. He had not stopped being the evil person he was, but the façade was enough to fool almost anyone including Jazel. Only three months after they and Jazel had (in her eyes first met) she was with child and Avin took her as his wife.

Ever since he had blamed his first child for the death of the woman he loved he named him Uri (Death) in their language. Uri Sa, as he had gotten older that his father had abandoned him and was now married with another child (who's name was Tobias Richter).

Jazel, had no idea that she had married, lived, and even had a child with one of the most evil men in the world. His façade would not last much longer and soon he would be forced to return to his home without her or his other son. He would return to his former home and to his first son. With hatred and anger in his heart he released it all upon Uri for more than a decade. That time would come to end when Uri Sa (song of Avin) died and the demon Deathsong would be born.
